DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

> A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –
>
> (e) the invention was described in-
> (1) an application for patent, published under section 122(b), by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a) shall have the effect under this subsection of a national application published under section 122(b) only if the international application designating the United States was published under Article 21(2)(a) of such treaty in the English language; or
> (2) a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that a patent shall not be deemed filed in the United States for the purposes of this subsection based on the filing of an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a).

Claim 1-4 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Namiki et al. (US 6,157,128).

Namiki discloses (fig 1 and 5) a PDP with a transparent substrate, scanning electrodes and sustaining electrodes formed on the transparent substrate extending in a first direction, an area of the scanning electrode being smaller than an area of the sustaining electrode in each of the display cells, and the widths of the scanning electrode and the sustaining electrode in a second direction crossing the first direction being substantially equal to each other.

Regarding claim 2, the scanning electrode comprising a ladder-shape electrode extending in the first direction provided in a center part thereof in the second direction.

Regarding claim 3, the scanning electrode comprising an electrode in a protrusion shape protruding in the first direction in a center part thereof in the second direction.

Regarding claim 4, a dimension (length) of the scanning electrode in the first direction increases as it gets close to the sustaining electrode.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

> (a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 5-12 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Namiki et al. (US 6,157,128) in view of Torisaki (US 6,456,006).

Regarding claims 5-12, Namiki discloses all of the above claim limitations and the maximum dimension of the scanning and sustaining electrode in the first direction being substantially equal and opposing each other.

Namiki fails to clearly point out the scanning and sustaining electrode being isolated in each of the display cells and commonly connected with a bus electrode.

Torisaki discloses (fig 6) the scanning and sustaining electrode being isolated in each of the display cells and commonly connected with a bus electrode in order to reduce electric power consumption and provide a discharge.

Hence it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to use the PDP of Namiki with the scanning and sustaining electrode being isolated in each of the display cells and commonly connected with a bus electrode in order to reduce electric power consumption and provide a discharge, as taught by Torisaki.

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. (US 5640068 and 6037916) disclose state of the art PDP.
